

SUIT JACKET SWEAT WORK

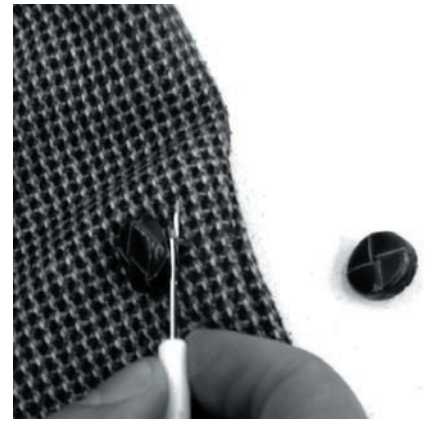

reforming a suit jacket into a warm re-sweated jacket for the burning cold of the aggressive fashionista gaze.

a >SELF_PASSAGE< method

© copyleft by >wronsov< June 2005

1. get an old suit jacket that you like. the arms are preferably a little too short.

2. unbutton the buttons on the sleeve.

3. unbutton the inner/lower seam of the lining in the sleeve.

4. find an old sweater that fits in color with the jacket.

5. cut off about 15cm of sleeve.

6. turn the sweater sleeve inside out and drag it over the (also inside out) jacket sleeve.

7. fit the sweater sleeve inbetween the outer fabric and lining of the jacket. pin it thoroughly.

8. turn it right - examine the result.

9. sew a large zig-zag over the edge, back-and-forth with a straight seam.

10. looking something like this.

11. check inside so the lining is at place.

12. now - unstash the front piece of the sweater, along sides, shoulders and neck.

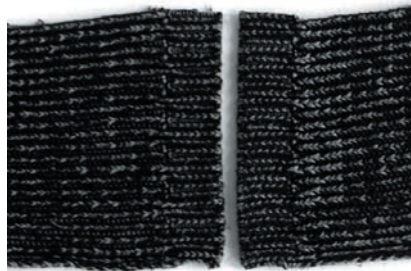

13. to a piece like this.

14. fold in two and cut along middle.

15. so you have two pieces like this.

16. take the two wide ends and sew them together into one long stitched scarf-like piece.

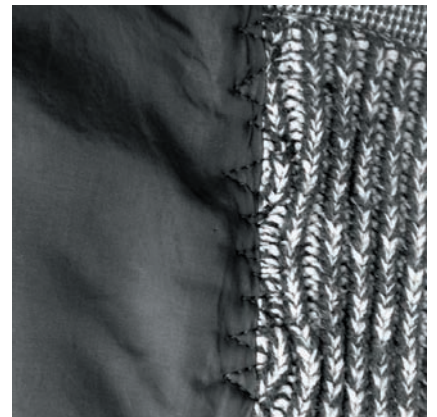

17. unstash the inner lining of the jacket, begin at the mid-neck and go down along the sides - as long as the stitched "scarf".

18. by the inner pocket there might be some improvisation.

19. pin the scarf between outer fabric and lining.

20. and sew a large zig-zag with a straight seam along the joint.

21. looking something like this from outside.

22. no sweat - behold a new jacket.

wear it. feel warm. feel smart.
- ready to fight any fashionista.